Airports and the Environment

Steve Pilcher, the City's Planning Manager was a presenter Tuesday at the Raisbeck Aviation High School during the Port of Seattle's "Environmental Challenge", which gives teams of high school students the opportunity to develop solutions to a mock aviation-themed challenge. This year's challenge was to look into the issues and opportunities relating to vacant airport properties. The task assigned to the students was to develop ideas and alternatives for what to do with three currently vacant properties held in Port ownership.

Steve took the opportunity to describe the regulatory contexts in which both the City and the Port must operate and how they relate to one another while sharing the City's perspective on the potential development of the sites undergoing analysis. He also informed the students about the City's planning and zoning framework and spoke generally about the planning profession.

A total of approximately 90 students attended the three classes, in what is just one of many opportunities that City staff use over the course of each year to interact with the community and increase communications with our residents and businesses.

FAA presentation at April 25 Port of Seattle Commission Meeting

The Port of Seattle Commission has scheduled a presentation from the Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) on the Next Generation Air Transportation System (Next Gen) at their April 25 meeting. Representatives from the FAA will review the Next Gen program which is described as "the modernization of our air transportation system." The Commission will also hear a presentation on current aircraft noise at Sea-Tac Airport in response to interest and comments from the airport communities. To update the Commissioners and the public on the latest efforts, staff will present Port efforts to address noise impacts from aircraft flying in and out of the airport. "As our region grows, local communities should gain improved economic opportunity and quality of life," the Port said in a statement. "The Port will continue to champion our neighborhoods, and work with the FAA to identify new and improved ways to address community concerns."

If you cannot attend the meeting in person, the Commission meetings are available through live streaming. You can get more information at the Port's webpage www.portseattle.org

POLICE NEWS

Alert Neighbors Help to Address Neighborhood Crime

On Wednesday April 5 at about 10:00 PM a resident in the area of S. 138th Street and Military Road S, called 911 to report a woman walking through his yard; he had seen the same woman going through mailboxes in the neighborhood the previous week. Deputy Yamamoto arrived and found the woman nearby on Military Road. The woman was not in possession of stolen mail but she was arrested on four outstanding warrants and investigation of possession of drug paraphernalia.

On Saturday April 15 at about 9:00 AM a resident in the area of S. 170th Street and 40th Avenue S. heard a woman screaming and saw her fighting against a male on the street. The resident called 911 and rushed to the woman's aid. She was being robbed of her purse and in the process, assaulted by the suspect who ultimately got away in a car (White Toyota Camry WA License # AWN5936). It is likely that the resident's intervention stopped the progression of the crime and limited injuries to the victim. He will be presented with a Police Partner, Community Service Award at a future Council Meeting.

The City of SeaTac and the SeaTac Police Department are grateful and humbled by the efforts of residents and community members to partner with us on behalf of public safety. Thank you.
