Port of Seattle Addresses Human Trafficking Issue

On January 9, the Port of Seattle Commissioners adopted its strategic commitment to stopping human trafficking here in our region, by addressing the issue at its facilities and throughout King County.

According to the Port's document, each year millions of men, women, and children are trafficked in countries around the world, including the United States. Washington State had the 14th highest call volume to the National Human Trafficking Hotline in 2015. An estimated 300-500 children are prostituted annually in King County, some are as young as 11 years old. The Port of Seattle Commission believes it has a unique role to play in combating human trafficking, not only because of its obligation to protect residents and visitors in King County, but also because of its role as both a large employer and as the manager of significant trade and travel facilities including the Sea-Tac International Airport. Their new strategy combines training, public awareness raising, policy efforts and public-private partnerships to increase their impact on this issue.

A copy of the Port's Strategy can be found at <https://www.portseattle.org/Supporting-Our-Community/Pages/Anti-Human-Trafficking.aspx>. For more information, contact Eric Schinfeld at the Port of Seattle at schinfeld.e@portseattle.org.
